The Giants Of Yesterday

No. 1—Triceratops.

By Garrett P. Serviss

YESTERDAY—the yesterday of geology—produced monsters that seem to have surpassed all that the imagination could have invented. The Triceratops, which means the "head with three horns," was particularly abundant in western America during the Cretaceous age, when a broad arm of the sea ran from the Gulf of Mexico across Texas, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Wyoming and Montana and far up into western Canada. He dwelt along the margin of that shallow sea, and lived mainly on a vegetable diet. He waded in the water also, and may have devoured small marine animals.

A Wonderful Armor. But he had to fight for life and he was prepared for it. His enormous body was covered with a hide stronger than that of a rhinoceros, and studded with huge horny bosses, pointed like thick spikes. Three great horns projected from his head, which was from six to eight feet long.

The most astonishing part of his armor, however, was the defensive shield, six feet or more in diameter, which encircled the back of his neck like a horny ruff, bordered with a row of sharp spikes. The heaviest rifle bullets would have been unable to penetrate this shield, and probably the sides of his great 25-foot body and tail were almost equally impenetrable. This shows how fearful must have been the power of his enemies, although much of his fighting was probably done with his own kind.

Professor Marsh believed that the Triceratops was an animal in which the development of defensive armor reached a point where it became an unbearable burden to the creature itself, interfering so much with its powers of locomotion that it could no longer successfully contend in the struggle for existence, with animals less cumbersome. Finally it disappeared from the earth, as knights of the Middle Ages, with their heavy armor, disappeared when gunpowder and bullets took the place of spears, swords and muscular arms on the battlefield.

A Dreadful Spectacle. But the battles with the smaller carnivorous animals, attacking these huge, unwieldy beasts like torpedoes boats besetting a giant battleship, were doubtless spectacles still more dreadful to look upon. The immense spiked armor covering the vast back and the enormous tail, tells us, as plainly as if we could look upon the scene itself, that these enemies were accustomed to leap upon the triceratops, seeking to beat him down with their numbers, and to rend his flanks in despite of their horny covering. The tail, which in itself must have weighed a ton or two, when flung about in rage and agony would have leveled small trees and bushes with every stroke.

They had not sufficient intelligence to adapt themselves to the changes going on around them, as the inland sea died up and animals with more brains in the head and less backbone, pressed them to the wall in the struggle for existence.

The earliest animals had nothing that could properly be called a brain; in the triceratops and its fellows the brain was of increasing importance, but it took millions of years for nature to develop in some of the successors of these monsters, in the next age after theirs, a brain one-eighth as large as that of the modern horse.

In the next article of this series I shall deal with the Stegosaurus, a creature that was, in some ways, even more extraordinary than the triceratops.

Eggs Stolen.

A case of eggs disappeared from the wagon of L. Dominguez, of the smelter, while it was standing at the corner of Second and El Paso streets Monday evening. He thinks somebody stole the hen fruit but the police could find no track of them.

ADVANCE IN RATES MAY BE POSTPONED

Cattle Raisers' Association Attorney Files Application with Commission.

Washington, D. C., April 8.—S. H. Cowan, attorney for the Cattle Raisers' association of Texas and the National Livestock association, has filed with the interstate commerce commission application to suspend the published tariffs which propose advances in rates on livestock from the Texas Panhandle and from New Mexico points to Kansas City, which range from one and one-half to six cents per hundred pounds. These advances in rates are practically the same as were suspended by the commission last fall. The railroad propose to put them into effect on April 23, but the application to suspend, it is claimed, will certainly be granted by the commission and will serve as a stay against advanced rates pending in the hearing by the commission.

THE GREAT TILLY

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and eighty years ago died Johann Tserclaus Tilly, one of the greatest captains of modern times.

The 17th century is one of the most important periods in the history of the human race. It was the century of fate. It settled things, and settled them for all time. To no period of the human story are the poet's words so thoroughly applicable as they are to that thrilling century: "We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time."

The holiest interests of humanity were at stake. The principles upon which all national healthy progress depends were imperiled. It was indeed an awful time, that 17th century. At the head of the Progressives stood Gustavus Adolphus, justly regarded as one of the greatest and noblest figures in history, while leading on the Reactionists was Tilly, one of the greatest of battle winners, cruel, remorseless, terrible.

Gustavus was fighting to make men free; Tilly was fighting to keep men in slavery. Gustavus was the champion of progress, of mental liberty, of the right to think, of the civilization of culture, freedom and individuality, while Tilly's superb genius was being used to perpetuate the tyranny of old custom and authority, the privilege of caste, the right of a few to dictate to the many the way they should live and think.

ROADS VOTED FOR BRIDGE BUILDING

Bonds Are Also Voted For Protecting Lower Valley From River.

Bonds in the sum of $7000 for the construction of bridges at Montoya and Vinton, Tex., carried at a bond election held at Canutillo, Monday. There were 11 votes in favor of the proposition and none in opposition. However, the bonds will not be issued until an agreement made by the Texas property owners and owners of property in New Mexico is carried out. This is to the effect that the New Mexico property owners subscribe $2000 toward the improvements.

The election for $10,000 in bonds for protection of valley lands between Washington park and Yaleta from high water the Rio Grande also carried. The voting was light. At precinct one, located at Washington park, there were two votes in favor of the bonds and two against them, while in precinct two, located at the Yaleta bridge near Yaleta, there were 10 in favor of the bonds and none against them.

These returns were canvassed by the county commissioners in session Tuesday morning, at which time they ordered levies made against the property in the improvement districts for the purpose of issuing the bonds.

At Tuesday's meeting the claim of county auditor J. E. Bauman for $375 salary for the three months ending March 31, 1912, was approved. San Ysidro acequia ordinance at Socorro was so revised that hereafter the justices of the peace will have jurisdiction in cases where violation of the ordinance is charged. Heretofore the county commissioners had jurisdiction.

It was ordered that a public pound be established at Socorro, Tex., to care for stray cattle and horses.

M. T. Powers has granted a quit claim deed for land in the Yaleta grant to which he held title. Quit claim deeds were also granted Park W. Pittman and W. C. Morgan.

A report presented by Justice H. F. Stacy, showing $44 collected, was approved.

The matter of building a road passing to the country club from the route to Fort Bliss was referred to county judge Elyar for investigation.

Tax collector George Harper was ordered to make a report on the delinquent taxpayers in the county.

The treasurer was instructed to issue warrants for $350 to pay interest on county bonds and jail bonds, $250 on jail bonds, $500 on road improvement bonds, and $500 on road improvement bonds. The sum of $75 was appropriated for the treasurer to check up jury scrip and $75 set aside in order to provide the county with an assistant for the ensuing month.

Tilly was 35 years old, and already a distinguished general, when (in 1594) Gustavus was born. Nobody thought that in the little Swedish babe humanity was to find the destroyer of the Apollon that was threatening to blot out the rights and bias the hopes of the ages. But it was even so.

In the Swede Tilly more than met his fate, and at the great battle of Breitenfeld, or Lelpel, went down before him in ignominious and overwhelming defeat.

Fortunately for the world, a greater than Tilly had come, and the future of humanity was secure. The hopes of the ages were not to be blotted out. The mind of the race was not to be throttled and degraded. Liberty was to live, and flourish until she should bless all men's lives with her golden fruit.

It was in September, 1631, that Tilly and his imperial forces were beaten at Breitenfeld, and the following spring, April, 1632—the great captain was mortally wounded while fleeing before Gustavus and his Swedes at the battle of the Lech.

Tilly's death was no loss to the human race. He was one of humanity's worst enemies. But for the terrible Tilly Bohemia would in all probability be a free land, as well as all other countries that might be mentioned. But for the ravages of Tilly's brilliant but cynical genius of the degradation and misery under which Europe still groans might never have existed.
